

The sun is just rising in this state where mispronouncing the name can get you headlines, folks will start to caucus in about 2 and a half hours.Â The local news is showing a story in which they have tracked down the most uninformed voters they can find and show them presidential flash cards.Â It is quite demoralizing.

The political ads are thick on the airwaves.Â Barack Obama is sounding hopeful behind me while I type this.Â He has been running a lot of ads on the local Telemundo affiliate, which could be significant in this state with a heavy hispanic population.Â Especially since the caucus goes on The Strip will have a weighted score, which Hillary thought was a good idea when she thought she would have their support, but now abhors.Â Oops!

Pawn is in town for The World of Concrete convention.Â Long story, don't ask.Â So, the above sign seemed appropriate...

Oh, and Hannah Montana is in town, so there's something for the under-18 set as well.
